PREFACE.

THE Dictionary now offered to the public differs from the original "Academic Dictionary" of Dr. Worcester in several respects. Like that work, it is an enlarged issue of the "Comprehensive Dictionary," designed especially for the use of the higher schools and seminaries of learning, but well adapted in its scope and range to the needs of families and individuals. It has been rendered, it is believed, as complete as its limits would permit, both in the extent of its vocabulary and in the fulness and accuracy of its definitions. In many cases the definitions are somewhat amplified reproductions of those found in the New Comprehensive Dictionary. In addition to a carefully chosen list of all the more common and well-authorized words of the language, it contains many technical terms employed in the arts and sciences, and a considerable number of local, provincial, and antiquated words, chiefly such as occur in books that are much read, or such as for some other reason are deemed specially important or interesting. Words of these exceptional classes are carefully discriminated and explained. The definitions are necessarily concise; but they will, it is believed, be found as exact and comprehensive as could reasonably be expected in a manual of this kind.

The design throughout has been to give the greatest practicable amount of useful matter in the most condensed form, and especially to guard against corruptions and solecisms in writing and speaking the language.

The distinctive feature of the "New Academic Dictionary" is its treatment of the etymology of words. In no other work of its size and class (so far as is known to the editors) is there any thing approaching it in fulness and completeness in this regard. The other etymological dictionaries of corresponding size and cost are either devoted exclusively to the explanation of etymology, with no attempt at any definition other than a bare identification of words, or, on the other hand, they are defining and pronouncing dictionaries with the merest hint at a derivation,—very often with no discrimination between well-established derivations and those which are purely conjectural.

It has been well observed that in etymological work originality is a dangerous or suspicious quality. Great care has accordingly been taken to follow only the best authorities. The large etymological dictionary of Prof. Skeat has furnished by far the greater part of the derivations here recorded. But where Skeat's derivations (as is very often the case) are purely conjectural, it has sometimes been deemed allowable to adopt other conjectures that have seemed more likely than his to be correct. Effort has been made to mark as conjectural or tentative such etymologies as are not well established. It is certain, however, that with the present rapid advance of human knowledge, much that is now considered as reasonably well established in etymology may soon come to be regarded as obsolete. Considerable use has been made of the etymological matter of the first four numbers of the New English Dictionary now in course of preparation under the supervision of Dr. Murray, of Oxford. But that great and praiseworthy work, for the most part, leaves to the etymologists proper the more remote derivation of English words, and its plan of strict historical treatment compels its editors to neglect many proposed etymologies which, though now conjectural, are full of suggestiveness, and which are likely to have a recognized importance in the future.

The student and teacher using this Dictionary should bear in mind that there are two classes of foreign words inserted in its etymological notes. The first class comprises those words (chiefly Latin, Greek, French, Norse, and Dutch) from which English words have been immediately or more remotely derived; the other class includes a large number of words (largely Germanic and Scandinavian, but very often from some one or more of the Romanic languages) which are cognate with the corresponding English words, but are not to be regarded as the parent-words of any English forms. In many instances of the latter class recorded in this work a suggestion is made of the nature of the relationship indicated; in other cases the word from which the English word is derived is placed first on the list, and the cognate and illustrative foreign words follow. No student at all familiar with the subject of the derivation of words will, it is believed, experience any difficulty in making the necessary discrimination in cases of this kind.

Many popular but fallacious derivations for words are here recorded, in order that the student may be warned of their misleading character, and may learn what seems to be a difficult lesson for most learners, namely, that mere speciousness or ingenuity can never furnish a good reason for accepting a derivation for a word. The only certain method of verifying an etymology is the historical one, —the actual tracing back of a word to its origin in recorded literature. Unhappily, the breaks in the record are very many and wide; and no little discrimination and labor are involved in the process of unearthing the roots of words by this strictly scientific method.

In adjusting the orthography of this Dictionary, scrupulous care has been taken to follow the precepts and example of Dr. Worcester. That able lexicographer paid great attention to usage, analogy, and etymology in deciding all disputable points; but he attempted no innovation in respect to matters of settled and invariable usage.

As in all of Dr. Worcester's dictionaries, pronunciation has been made a special object, and has received particular attention.

A peculiar feature of Worcester's dictionaries consists in the exhibition of authorities respecting words of various, doubtful, or disputed pronunciation. There is a rather large class of English words the pronunciation of which, even among the best orthoepists and the most careful speakers, is not clearly established. It is not possible that any one should know or remember what is the best usage among all these forms; and no one who is at all scrupulous about his pronunciation will be willing to rely solely on the opinion of any one orthoepist. Careful speakers will prefer to be informed, in all doubtful cases, regarding the various pronunciations which have been adopted by the best authorities. In this work the preference indicated by Dr. Worcester has in every instance been retained; in addition to which there have been placed in brackets the pronunciations offered by all the leading orthoepists of England and America. Dr. Worcester's collation of authorities has been amplified and enriched by the insertion of the preferences of all the recent lexicographers and orthoepists of distinction.

VOWELS.

	Examples.
1. Ā long	Fāte, Āid, Lāce, Plāyer.
2. Ă short	Făt, Măn, Lăd, Cărry.
3. Å long before r	Fåre, Båre, Påir, Beår.
4. Ä Italian or grave	Fär, Fäther, Färther.
5. Ā intermediate	Fāst, Brānch, Grāsp.
6. Â broad	Fâll, Hâul, Wâlk, Wârm.
7. Ạ slight or obscure	Liạr, Palạce, Abbạcy.
1. Ē long	Mēte, Sēal, Fēar, Kēēp.
2. Ĕ short	Mĕt, Mĕn, Sĕll, Fĕrry.
3. Ê like à	Hêir, Thêre, Whêre.
4. Ë short and obtuse	Hër, Hërd, Fërn, Fërvid.
5. Ẹ slight or obscure	Briẹr, Fuẹl, Celẹry.
1. Ī long	Pīne, Fīle, Fīnd, Mīld.
2. Ĭ short	Pĭn, Fĭll, Mĭss, Mĭrror.
3. Î like long ē	Mîen, Machîne, Marîne.
4. Ï short and obtuse	Sïr, Fïr, Bïrd, Vïrtue.
5. Ị slight or obscure	Elixịr, Ruịn, Abiliṭy.

	Examples.
1. Ō long	Nōte, Fōal, Tōw, Sōre.
2. Ŏ short	Nŏt, Dŏn, Ŏdd, Bŏrrow.
3. Ô long and close	Môve, Prôve, Fôôd.
4. Ö broad, like broad â	Nör, Förm, Sört, Öught.
5. Ō like short ū	Sōn, Dōne, Cōme, Mōney.
6. Ọ slight or obscure	Actọr, Cọnfess.
1. Ū long	Tūbe, Tūne, Sūit, Pūre.
2. Ŭ short	Tŭb, Tŭn, Hŭt, Hŭrry.
3. Û middle or obtuse	Bûll, Pûll, Fûll, Pûsh.
4. Ü short and obtuse	Für, Mürmur, Fürther.
5. Ū like ô in môve	Rūle, Rūde, Brūte.
6. Ụ slight or obscure	Sulphụr, Famoụs.
7. U̇ affected by a marked y sound	U̇se, Sinu̇ous.
8. Ʊ̈ French.
1. Ȳ long	Tȳpe, Stȳle, Lȳre.
2. Ў short	Sўlvan, Sўmbọl.
3. Ÿ short and obtuse	Mÿrrh, Mÿrtle.
4. Ỵ slight or obscure	Trulỵ, Envỵ, Martỵr.

öĭ and öў . . . . . Böĭl, Töĭl, Böў, Töў.
öû and öo͡o . . . . . Böûnd, Töo͡n, Nöo͡.
Eū̃ like long ū . . . . . Feū̃, Neū̃, Deū̃.

CONSONANTS.

	Examples.
Ç, ç, soft, like s	Açid, Plaçid.
Ȼ, ȼ, hard, like k	Flaȼcid, Sȼeptic.
Ch, ch, hard, like k	Character, Chasm.
Ch, ch, soft, like sh	Chaise, Chevalier.
Ch (unmarked) like tsh	Charm, Church.
G, g̃, hard	Get, Give, Gift.
G, g̃, soft, like j	Gender, Giant.
N̂, n̂, nasal, like ng	Uⁿction.
Ş, ş, soft, like z	Muşe, Dişmal.
X, x, soft or flat, like gz	Example, Exist.
Th, th̃, soft, flat, or vocal	This, Thee, Then.
Th, th (unmarked) sharp	Thin, Think, Pith.
Tion, Sion like shun	Nation, Notion. Pension, Mission.
Şion, like zhun	Confuşion, Vişion.
Cean, Cian like shan	Ocean. Optician.
Cial, Sial, Tial like shal	Commercial. Controversial. Partial, Martial.

Geous, Gious like jus	Courag̃eous. Relig̃ious.
Qu (unmarked) like kw	Queen, Quill.
Wh (unmarked) like hw	When, While.
Ph (unmarked) like f	Phantom, Seraph.

REMARKS ON THE KEY.

1. The words which are used in the preceding Key as examples for illustrating the several sounds exhibit accurately, when pronounced by correct speakers, the different sounds of the respective letters. Some distinctions are here made which are not found in other systems of notation; they are, however, not intended to introduce any new sounds, but merely to discriminate such as are now employed by all who speak the language with propriety.

2. When the marks of pronunciation are affixed to words in their proper orthography, in this Dictionary, without respelling them, the vowels which are not marked are silent: thus, a in bēat, hēar; e in āble, gīve, härden; i in pāin, hĕifer; o in māson, fāmous; u in thōugh; and w in fōllōw, are not sounded. To this rule there is an exception with respect to the first vowel in those proper diphthongs which are called semi-consonant diphthongs, as in ocean, nation, assuage. (See No. 28, p. 14.)

3. The system of notation which is here used, while it makes a very exact discrimination of the different sounds of the letters, will be readily understood and easily applied to practice; and it will also be much more easily remembered than a system in which the vowels are marked with figures. By applying the marks to the letters of the words in their proper orthography, the necessity of respelling most of them has been avoided; and in this way considerable space has been saved, while the pronunciation is fixed with as much exactness as if the spelling of every word had been repeated.

4. It is an advantage of this method of notation, that it distinguishes the syllables which receive a secondary accent, or are pronounced with a distinct sound of the vowels, from those which are but slightly or indistinctly sounded. A great part of the words of the English language that have more than two syllables have more than one syllable in some degree accented, or pronounced more distinctly than the rest; yet this difference in distinctness is not made apparent by the usual modes of marking the words. In this notation the vowels in the syllables which have either the primary or secondary accent have a mark placed over them denoting a distinct sound; while those which are more feebly uttered have a dot placed under them. Take, for example, the following words, which are thus noted: sŭn′shīne, pā′pẹr, ăn′ẹc-dōte, căr-ạ-văn′, lĭt′ẹr-ạl, măn-ị-fẹs-tā′tiọn, ĭn-dị-vĭs-ị-bĭl′-ị-tẏ. In these words it will be readily perceived that all the vowels which have a mark placed over them have a distinct sound, or are more or less accented, while those which have a dot under them are but slightly or indistinctly sounded; and that the pronunciation is as clearly represented to the eye in their proper orthography as it is in other methods of notation by respelling the words.

5. There are many cases in which the vowels are pronounced with so slight a degree of distinctness that it may be a matter of indifference whether they are marked with the distinct or indistinct sound; thus, for example, the last syllable of the words consonant, difference, diffident, feebleness, and obvious might with nearly equal propriety have the vowel marked with a short or an indistinct sound.

SOUNDS OF THE VOWELS.

6. The first, or long, sound of each of the vowels, marked thus, ā, ē, ī, ō, ū, is styled its alphabetic or name sound, being the sound which is heard in naming the letter. The sound of the letter y, when used as a vowel, is the same as that of i; but as a vowel it begins no properly English word now in common use.

7. The long sound of the vowels is generally indicated, in monosyllables, by a silent e at the end of the word, preceded by a single consonant; as in fate, mete, pine, note, tube, type. The following words, however, are exceptions,—namely, axe, have, are, and bade, the preterite of to bid. The vowels have regularly the long sound if final in an accented syllable; as in ba′sis, le′gal, trī′al, sono′rous, cu′bic, ty′rant.

8. The second, or short, sound of the vowels is generally indicated, in monosyllables, by the absence of mute e at the end of the word; as in fat, met, pin, not, tub, hyp. It is also the usual sound of a vowel in an accented syllable which ends with a consonant; as in aban′don, atten′tive, exhib′it, lacon′ic, reluc′tant, lyr′ical.

9. The fourth sound of the vowels, a, e, i, o, and u, and the third sound of y (called, with respect to e, i, u, and y, short and obtuse), marked thus, ä, ë, ĭ, ö, ü, ÿ, are the short sounds of these several vowels when followed by r in a monosyllable or in an accented syllable; as far, hard; her, herd; fir, firkin; north, normal; fur, burden; myrrh, myrtle; but when the succeeding syllable begins with r, or the sound of r, as in pĕrry, pĕril, the vowel has the proper short sound. Some orthoepists make no distinction between the sound indicated by this mark and the proper short sound of these vowels; others make a distinction in relation to a part of them only. The vowels having this mark are pronounced with as short a sound as they can readily receive when thus situated. The peculiar character of this sound, which distinguishes it from the proper short sound of the vowels, is caused by the letter r; and this letter, thus situated, has an influence peculiar to itself on the sound of all the vowels. The difference between the sound of the vowels when thus situated, and their proper short sound, will be readily perceived by the following examples: măn, mărrow; măr, märket;—mĕn, mĕrry; hĕr, mĕrchant;—fĭn, mĭrror; fĭr, cĭrcle;—nŏt, bŏrrow; nŏr, bŏrder;—tŭn, hŭrry; fŭr, hŭrdle. There is little or no difference in the sounds of the vowels e, i, u, and y, when under this mark; as hĕr, fĭr, fŭr, mÿrrh; but their proper short sounds are widely different from each other when they are followed by the sound of r or by other consonants, as in merry, peril, mirror, hurry.—See remarks on the sound of the letter R, page 19.

10. Vowels marked with the dot underneath, thus, ạ, ẹ, ị, ọ, ụ, ỵ, are found only in syllables which are not accented and over which the organs of speech pass slightly and hastily in pronouncing the words in which they are found. It is to be observed that this mark is employed to indicate a slight stress of voice in uttering the appropriate sound of the vowel rather than to note any particular quality of sound. If the syllables on which the primary and secondary accents fall are uttered with a proper stress of voice, these comparatively indistinct syllables will naturally be pronounced right. In a majority of cases this mark may be regarded as indicating an indistinct short sound of the vowel, as in tenable, mental, travel, peril, idol, forum, carry; but in many cases it indicates a slight or unaccented long sound, as in carbonate, sulphate, emerge, obey, ebony, follower, duplicity, educate, regulate, congratulate. The letter u, in the last three words, is pronounced like yu slightly articulated. The vowels with this mark have, in some situations, particularly in the last syllable of words ending with r, no perceptible difference of sound; as in friar, speaker, nadir, actor, sulphur, zephyr. As Mr. Smart justly remarks, "the last syllables of robber, nadir, author, sulphur, and satyr are quite undistinguishable in pronunciation."

A, unaccented, at the end of a word, approaches the Italian sound of a in father, as in the words algebra, comma, idea; and ah, final, partakes still more of the Italian sound, as in *Jehovah, Messiah.

A.

11. The third sound of the letter a, marked thus, å, is its long sound qualified by being followed by the letter r, as in care, pare, fare. The diphthong ai followed by r has precisely the same sound, as in fair, pair; so also, in some cases, has the diphthong ea, as in bear, pear. This sound of the letter a is the same as that of the letter e in heir, there, where. There is obviously a difference between the sound of a in these words, as they are pronounced by good speakers, and its sound in pain and fate. There is the same difference between the sound of a in the word pair and its sound in the word payer, one who pays; also in the word prayer, a petition, and in the word prayer, one who prays.

12. The fifth sound of a, marked thus, ä, is an intermediate sound of this letter, between its short sound, as in fat, man, and its Italian sound, as in far, father; this sound being somewhat shorter than the Italian sound of a. With respect to the class of words which, in this Dictionary, have this mark, there is much diversity among orthoepists. Most of these words are marked by Nares, Jones, and Perry with the Italian sound of a, as in fär and fäther; but Walker, Jameson, Smart, Reid, and Craig mark them, or most of them, with the short sound, as a in făt, măn; Fulton and Knight mark them as being intermediate between the short and the Italian sound; and Smart, though he gives to a in most of these words the short mark, says, in relation to it, "that when a is followed by f, s, or n, there is, in many words, a disposition to broadness in the vowel, not quite in unison with the mode of indication, as may be perceived in an unaffected pronunciation of grass, graft, command. This broadness is a decided vulgarism when it identifies the sound with ä. The exact sound lies between the one indicated and the vulgar corruption."

The following list includes a considerable part of the class of words in which, in this Dictionary, a is marked thus, ä, and in which, according to Nares, Jones, and Perry, a has the Italian sound, as in father; according to Walker, Jameson, Reid, and Craig, the short sound of a, as in fat, man; and according to Fulton and Knight, an intermediate sound between these two sounds. This intermediate sound, marked thus, ä, is in accordance with the remark of that excellent orthoepist, Mr. Smart, who says that when this sound is identified with the Italian sound of ä it "is a decided vulgarism."

* With respect to the sound given to the letter a in unaccented syllables, there is a great diversity among orthoepists. For example, to a in courage, Sheridan, Walker, and Jones give the short sound of i; Jameson and Smart, the sound of long a;—to a in delicate, Walker gives the sound of short a; Jameson and Smart, of long a; Sheridan and Jones, of short e;—to a in furnace, Sheridan and Walker give the sound of short i; Jones and Jameson, of short e; Smart, of long a. A at the end of words is marked by Sheridan, Walker, Jones, Jameson, and various other orthoepists with its short sound, as in algebra, comma, idea; but by Smart it is marked with the Italian sound, as an "unaccented vowel,"—algebrȧ. Walker says, "We cannot give it [a] any of its three open sounds without hurting the ear. Thus, in pronouncing the words abound and diadem, ay-bound, ah-bound, and aw-bound; di-ay-dem, di-ah-dem, and di-aw-dem, are all improper; but giving the a the second or Italian sound, as ah-bound and di-ah-dem, seems the least so. For which reason I have, like Mr. Sheridan, adopted the short sound of this letter to mark the unaccented a; but if the unaccented a be final, it then seems to approach still nearer to the Italian a in the last syllable of papa, and to the a in father, as may be heard in the deliberate pronunciation of the words idea, Africa, Delta," &c.

There is a considerable number of words in which a has the sound of short o, as in not, called by Walker "the short sound of broad a." This sound occurs chiefly in words in which a is preceded by qu, w, or wh; as, quadrangle (quŏdrangle), quality (quŏlity), swallow (swŏllow), wad (wŏd), wan (wŏn), what (whŏt); also, scallop (scŏllop), chaps (chŏps).

E.

13. The letter e has, in several words, the same sound as a in fare, as in heir, there, where; but were is properly pronounced wër. In clerk and sergeant it has, according to all the English orthoepists, the sound of a in dark and margin; yet in this country it is not uncommon to pronounce these words, more in accordance with their orthography, clërk and sërgeant.

14. When e precedes l or n in an unaccented final syllable, in some words it has an indistinct short sound, and in some it is entirely suppressed. In most of the words ending in el the e is sounded; as, flannel, travel, vessel, &c. The following words are exceptions, and in these the sound of e before l is suppressed: drivel, grovel, hazel, mantel, navel, ousel, ravel, rivel, shekel, shovel, shrivel, snivel, weasel.

In most of the words ending in en the sound of e is suppressed; as, harden, heaven, often, &c. The following words are exceptions: abdomen, acumen, aspen, bitumen, catechumen, cerumen, chicken, flannen, hymen, hyphen, kitchen, latten, legumen, linen, marten, mitten, omen, patten, platen, pollen, regimen, siren, sloven, specimen, sudden, ticken, woollen, women.

15. The sound of the letter e is generally suppressed in the preterites of verbs and in participles in ed, when the e is not preceded by d or t; as, feared, praised, admired, tossed, suppressed, pronounced feard, praisd, admird, tost, supprest. But adjectives ending in ed, unless they are participles as well as adjectives, commonly preserve the sound of e before d, as in naked, ragged, striped, wicked, wretched, &c. In the following words, beloved, blessed, cursed, learned, picked, and winged, the sound of e before d is suppressed when the words are used as verbs or participles, and it is sounded when they are used as adjectives; as, He was much beloved; he blessed the occasion; he cursed the day; he learned to read; he picked his men; he winged his flight:—A belov'ed son; a bless'ed day; a curs'ed thing; a learn'ed man; a pick'ed point; a wing'ed fowl.—Picked, however, used as a participial adjective, in the sense of selected, as "picked men," is pronounced in one syllable.

I.

16. The long sound of the letter i is heard not only in monosyllables ending with a mute e, as in file, time, &c., but also in the word pint, and in the words child, mild, wild; also in bind, blind, find, hind, kind, mind, rind, &c.

17. There is a class of words, mostly derived from the French and Italian languages, in which i retains the sound of long e; as, ambergris, antique, unique, bombazine, Brazil, capivi, capuchin, caprice, chagrin, chevaux-de-frise, critique, gabardine, quarantine, ravine, routine, fascine, fatigue, intrigue, invalid, machine, magazine, marine, palanquin, pique, police, recitative, tabourine, tambourine, tontine, transmarine, ultramarine, verdigris. In the word shire, i commonly has the same sound, and some orthoepists also give it the same in oblige and oblique.

18. In words which terminate in ile and ine, with the accent on the penultimate syllable, the i in the final syllable is generally short; as, fertile, hostile, adamantine, intestine, &c. The following are exceptions: edile, exile, gentile, pentile, feline, ferine, confine, and a few others. Also when the accent is on the antepenult, words ending in ile generally have the i short; as, juvenile, puerile, &c.; but it is long in camomile, reconcile, eolipile.

19. With respect to words ending in ine, and having the accent on the antepenultimate, there is much uncertainty as to the quantity of the i; and in relation to a number of such words there is much disagreement among orthoepists; yet the general rule inclines to the long sound of i in the termination of words of this class. In the following words, i, in the last syllable, is generally pronounced long: adulterine, almandine, armentine, asinine, belluine, bizantine, brigantine, cannabine, celandine, colubrine, columbine, concubine, countermine, crystalline, legatine, leonine, metalline, muscadine, porcupine, saccharine, saturnine, serpentine, turpentine, vespertine, vituline.—In the following words, i, in the last syllable, is short: discipline, feminine, genuine, heroine, hyaline, jessamine, libertine, masculine, medicine, nectarine, palatine. With respect to alkaline, aquiline, coralline, sapphirine, uterine, viperine, and some others, the orthoepists, as well as usage, are divided. In the termination ine in a class of chemical words the i is short; as, fluorine, iodine, nepheline, &c. In the termination ite the i is sometimes short, as in respite, granite, favorite, infinite, &c.; and sometimes long, as in expedite, appetite, satellite, &c. In a class of gentile nouns, and appellatives formed from proper names, it is long; as, Hivite, Wicliffite; also, generally, in names of minerals; as, augite, stealite, tremolite. In verbs which end in ise, the i is long; as, advertise, exercise, &c.; but divertise, franchise, mortise, practise, and their compounds, are exceptions; also promise.

20. When i ends an initial syllable without the accent, and the succeeding syllable begins with a consonant, the i is generally short or indistinct, as if written e; as in civility, divine, finance; but the exceptions to this rule are numerous, among which are biquadrate, chirography, biography, divaricate, librarian, primeval, tribunal, vitality, and many others, in which the i is pronounced long. There is also a considerable number of words with regard to which there is a diversity, in relation to the pronunciation of the i, among orthoepists and in usage; as, dilate, diverge, virago, &c.

O.

21. There is a class of monosyllables ending in t, ft, ss, st, and th in which o is marked with the short sound in most pronouncing dictionaries, though some orthoepists give it the sound of broad a, as in fall. Mr. Nares gives the sound of broad a to o in the following words (as some others do in a part of them): off, often, offer, coffee, scoff, aloft, loft, soft, cross, loss, toss, cost, frost, lost, tost, broth, cloth, froth, cough, and trough. To these some others might, with equal propriety, be added; as, offspring, dross, gloss, moss, moth, wroth. Mr. Smart remarks "that before ss, st, and th the letter o is frequently sounded as âw; as in moss, gloss, &c., lost, cost, &c., broth, cloth, &c. This practice is analogous to the broad utterance which the letter a [short] is liable to receive before certain consonants [see A, No. 12]; and the same remarks will apply in the present case, as to the one referred to, —namely, that, though the broad sound is vulgar, there is an affectation in a palpable effort to avoid it in words where its use seems at one time to have been general. In such cases a medium between the extremes is the practice of the best speakers." The sound of o is somewhat prolonged also in gone and begone, and in some words ending in ng; as, long, along, prong, song, strong, thong, throng, wrong.

There are a few words in which o has the mark of the long sound in all the pronouncing dictionaries, although it is in these words by many, if not by most speakers in this country, somewhat shortened. Thus we hear the sound o in the words coal, home, hope, spoke, stone, whole, wholly, and wholesome pronounced with a sound a little shorter than its proper long sound, as heard in goat, note, dome, hole, sole, holy, and dolesome.

22. There are some words in which o has the same sound as u in bull, or oo in good,—namely, bosom, wolf, woman, Wolsey, Wolverhampton. It has the sound of short u in done, son, &c., and the sound of u as in hurt in word, work, worth, &c.

23. In many words ending in on, the sound of o is suppressed, as in bacon, pardon, weapon, reason, cotton, &c.

U.

24. U, at the beginning of words, when long, has the sound of yu, as in use.—With respect to the manner of designating the sound of the vowel u when it comes immediately after the accent, as in the words educate, nature, natural, &c., there is much diversity among orthoepists. By Walker, the pronunciation of EDUCATE is thus noted—ĕd′-jū-kāt; by Sheridan, Jones, Enfield, Fulton, and Jameson, thus—ĕd′ū-kāt; and by Perry, Knowles, Smart, and Reid, thus, ĕd′u-kāt. NATURE, by Walker, thus—nā′chŭr; by Sheridan and Jones, thus—nā′chŭr; by Perry, Enfield, and Reid, thus —nā′tur; by Jameson and Knowles, thus—nāt′-yŭr; by Smart, thus—nā′tūr or nā′ch′ôr. NATURAL, by Walker and Jones, thus—nāt′chū-răl, by Sheridan, thus—nāt′chŭr-ăl; by Fulton, Enfield, and Jameson, thus—nāt′ū-răl; by Perry and Reid, thus—nāt′u-răl; by Knowles, thus—nāt′-yŭr-ăl; by Smart, thus—nāt′chô-răl.

There is a pretty large class of words with respect to which there is a similar diversity in the manner in which the pronunciation of u and tu is noted by the different orthoepists; but the difference is greater in appearance than in reality. The u thus situated (in the present work marked ŭ) may properly be regarded as having the slight sound of long u; and the sound may be noted by yu, slightly articulated.—Walker remarks, with respect to the pronunciation of nature, "There is a vulgar pronunciation of this word as if written na′tur, which cannot be too carefully avoided. Some critics have contended that it ought to be pronounced as if written nate′yure; but this pronunciation comes so near to that here adopted [nā′chŭr] as scarcely to be distinguishable from it."

When u is preceded by r in the same syllable it has the sound of oo in fool, and it is thus marked, as in rule, true. This sound is given to u thus situated by Walker, Smart, and all the other principal English orthoepists.

In busy and business u has the sound of short i, and in bury, the sound of short e.

Y.

25. Y, at the end of a word, preceded by a consonant, is commonly pronounced short and indistinct, like indistinct e; as, policy, palpably, lately, colony, &c. The exceptions are monosyllables; as, by, cry, dry, fly, fry, sty, ply, try, wry, with their compounds, awry, hereby, whereby, &c.; also, verbs ending in fy; as, fortify, magnify, testify, &c.; also, ally, apply, comply, imply, supply, multiply, reply, occupy, and prophesy; in all which it has the long sound.

SOUNDS OF THE DIPHTHONGS AND TRIPHTHONGS.

26. A diphthong is the union of two vowels, pronounced by a single impulse of the voice; as, oi in voice, ou in sound.

27. A triphthong is the union of three vowels, pronounced by a single impulse of the voice; as, ieu in adieu, iew in view.

28. A proper diphthong is one in which both vowels are sounded; as, oi in voice, ou in sound, ow in now.

PROPER DIPHTHONGS.

ea in ocean;	io in notion;	ua in assuage;
eu " feud;	oi " voice;	ue " desuetude;
ew " jewel;	ou " sound;	ui " languid;
ia " poniard;	ow " now;	uo " quote.
ie " spaniel;	oy " boy;

The diphthongs which begin with e, i, or u—namely, ea, eu, ew, ia, ie, io, ua, ue, ui, and uo—differ from the rest; and they may, as Walker says, "not improperly be called semi-consonant diphthongs," being pronounced as if y consonant was substituted in place of e or i; as, ocean (ose'yan), poniard (pon'yard), question (quest'yon); and as if w consonant were substituted in place of u; as, assuage (as-swage'), languid (lan'gwid), &c.

29. An improper diphthong has only one of the vowels sounded; as, ea in heat, oa in coal.

IMPROPER DIPHTHONGS.

æ or ae in Cæsar;	ea in beat;	ie in friend;
ai " pain;	ee " seed;	oa " boat;
ao " gaol;	ei " either;	œ " œsophagus;
au " haul;	eo " people;	oo " soon;
aw " law;	ey " they;	ow " crow.
ay " bay;

Æ.

30. This is a Latin diphthong, and is always pronounced like e in Latin. In English it is used only in words of Latin origin or formation; as, aqua-vitæ, minutiæ, æsthetics; and it is commonly long, as in pæan, but sometimes short, as in Dædalus.

AI.

31. The usual sound of this diphthong is the same as long a, as in pail, pain, pronounced like pale, pane. The following are the principal exceptions. It has the sound of short e in said and saith, and in again and against; that of short a in plaid and raillery; that of long i in aisle; and in a final unaccented syllable it has the obscure sound of the indistinct short i, as in fountain, mountain, curtain, &c.

AO.

32. This diphthong occurs only in the word gaol, pronounced, as well as very often written, jail.

AU.

33. The common sound of this diphthong is the same as that of broad a or aw, caul and haul being pronounced exactly like call and hall. But when these letters are followed by n and another consonant, the sound is changed, in a number of words, to that of the Italian a in far and farther; as, by most of the orthoepists, in the following words: aunt, craunch, daunt, flaunt, gaunt, gauntlet, haunch, haunt, jaunt, jaundice, laugh, launch, laundress, laundry, maund, paunch, saunter, staunch. Some orthoepists pronounce a part of these words with the sound of broad a, as most of them do the word vaunt, and many of them the word taunt. In the word draught, this diphthong has according to some orthoepists the sound of a in far, and according to others the short sound of a in fat; in gauge, the sound of long a (as in page); in hautboy, the sound of long o; and in cauliflower, laudanum, and laurel, it is by some orthoepists pronounced with the sound of short o, and by others with the sound of broad a; as, cŏl'iflower or câu'liflower, &c.

AW.

34. This diphthong has the sound of broad a,—bawl and ball being pronounced exactly alike.

AY.

35. This diphthong has the sound of long a, as in pay, hay, &c.; except in quay, which is pronounced kē. It has the sound of short e in says; and in Sunday, Monday, &c., the last syllable is pronounced as if written Sunda, or Sundy, &c.

EA.

36. The regular sound of this diphthong is that of long e, as in beat, hear, pronounced like beet, here; but there are many words in which it has the sound of short e; as, head, dead, ready, &c. In some words it has the sound of short and obtuse e, as in earn, heard, pearl, &c. In a few words it has the sound of long a; as in break, steak, great, bear, bearer, forbear, forswear, pear, swear, tear, wear. In some words it has the sound of a in far; as in heart, hearten, hearty, hearth, hearken; and when unaccented it has only an obscure sound, as in vengeance, sergeant.

The proper diphthong ea is found in a very few words; as, ocean, cetacean, testacean.

EAU.

37. This triphthong is used only in words derived from the French. In beauty it has the sound of long u; but its regular sound is that of long o, as in beau, bureau, flambeau, &c.

EE.

38. This diphthong is almost always pronounced like long e; the principal exceptions are been and breeches, ordinarily pronounced bĭn and brĭtches. The poetical contractions e'er and ne'er, for ever and never, are pronounced as if written air and nair.

EI.

39. This diphthong has most commonly the sound either of long a or of long e. It has the sound of long a in deign, eight, feign, feint, freight, heinous, inveigh, neigh, neighbor, reindeer, skein, veil, vein, weigh, weight, heir, their, &c. It has the sound of long e in ceil, ceiling, conceit, conceive, deceit, deceive, inveigle, perceive, receipt, receive, seize, seizin, seignior, seigniory, seine; commonly also in either, neither, and leisure. It has the sound of long i in height, heighten, and sleight; of short e in heifer and nonpareil; and in an unaccented syllable an indistinct sound of i, as in foreign, foreigner, forfeit, forfeiture, sovereign, sovereignty, surfeit.

EO.

40. This diphthong is pronounced like long o in yeoman and yeomanry, and like long e in people; like short e in jeopard, jeopardy, leopard, feoffee, feoffer, feoffment; like broad o (as in nor) in georgic; like long u in feod, feodal, feodary (which are now commonly written feud, feudal, and feudary); and when unaccented it has the indistinct sound of u or o, as in bludgeon, curmudgeon, dudgeon, dungeon, gudgeon, luncheon, puncheon, truncheon, surgeon, sturgeon, scutcheon, escutcheon, and the indistinct sound of i or o, as in pigeon, widgeon.

EU.

41. This diphthong is always sounded like long u, as in feud, deuce.

EW.

42. This diphthong is almost always sounded like long u, or eu, as in few, hew, new; but if r precedes it it takes the sound of oo, or of u in rule, as in brew, crew, drew. In the words shew and strew (written also show and strow) this diphthong has the sound of long o, as it also has in the verb to sew, and commonly also in the word sewer, a drain.

EY.

43. This diphthong has the sound of long a, as in bey, dey, grey, hey, prey, they, whey, convey, obey, purvey, survey, eyre, eyry. In key and ley it has the sound of long e; and when unaccented it has the slight sound of e, as in galley, valley, &c.

IA.

44. This diphthong, in the terminations ial, ian, and iard, often forms but one syllable, the i being sounded like consonant y; as, Christian, filial, poniard, pronounced as if written Christ'yun, fil'yal, pon'yard. In some words it has the obscure sound of indistinct short i, as in carriage, marriage, parliament.

IE, IO, IEU, IEW.

45. The regular sound of the diphthong ie is that of long e, as in chief, fief, field, fiend, grenadier, grief, grieve, lief, liege, mien, thief, &c. It has the sound of long i in die, hie, lie, pie, vie, &c.; and the sound of short e in friend.—The diphthong io occurs in many words in the termination ion. When i in this termination is preceded by a liquid, ion is pronounced like yun, as mill*ion,* min*ion.* The terminations sion and tion are pronounced like shun, as ver*sion,* na*tion;* but when the t is preceded by s or x, ion is pronounced yun, as ques*tion,* mix*tion.*

The triphthong ieu is found only in a few words, which are derived from the French, as, adieu, lieu, purlieu; and it has the sound of long u.—The triphthong iew occurs only in view, interview, and purview.

OA.

46. The regular sound of this diphthong is that of long o, as in boat, coat, coal, foal, loaf, moat, &c.; but in broad, abroad, and groat it has the sound of broad a.

Œ.

47. This diphthong is derived from the Latin; and it is retained in but very few words used in English. It is found in assafœtida, where it is pronounced like short e; and in œdema, œsophagus, antœci, also in fœtus (often written fetus), in which it has the sound of long e.

ŒU.

48. This triphthong is found only in the word manœuvre, and it has the sound of oo in moon, or of u in rule.

OI, OY.

49. The sound of these diphthongs is the same; and it is noted in this Dictionary, as it is in that of Walker, and in various other pronouncing dictionaries, by the combined sound of broad o (as in nor) and short i or y, as bȯ̈il, bȯ̈y.

OO.

50. The regular sound of this diphthong is heard in moon, food, stoop; and it is the same as that of single o in move, prove.

51. This diphthong has a shorter sound (the same as the sound of u in bull, or of single o in wolf) in the words ending in ook, as book, brook, cook, crook, look, rook, stook, took; also in foot, good, hood, stood, wood, wool, and their compounds. Walker says that "foot, good, hood, stood, understood, withstood, wood, and wool are the only words where this diphthong has this middle sound." But the rest of the words above enumerated are pronounced with the same sound of this diphthong by other orthoepists, as they are also in common usage. Smart says that the pronunciation assigned by Walker to book (bo͝ok) "is a decided provincialism."

52. This diphthong has the sound of long o in door, floor, and brooch, and of short u in blood and flood.

OU.

53. This is the most irregular diphthong in the language. Its most common or regular sound is that in which both letters are heard, as in bound, sound, cloud, loud, our, shout, south, &c.

54. This diphthong has the sound of short u in country, cousin, couple, accouple, double, trouble, southern, courage, encourage, flourish, nourish, nourishment, enough, chough, rough, tough, touch, touchy, young, youngster, &c. It has the sound of o in move, or oo in moon, in accoutre, aggroup, group, croup, bouge, amour, paramour, bouse, bousy, capouch, cartouch, rouge, soup, surtout, tour, contour, detour, tourney, tournament, through, uncouth, you, your, youth, and also in various other words derived from the French. It has the sound of long o in court, account, courtier, course, concourse, recourse, discourse, source, resource, four, fourth, pour, though, although, dough, mould, moult, mourn, shoulder, smoulder, poult, poultice, poultry, soul. It has the sound of broad a, as in ball, or o, as in nor, in bought, brought, fought, ought, nought, sought, besought, thought, wrought. It has the sound of u in bull, or of oo in good, in could, should, would. It has the sound of short o in hough, also (or, according to some orthoepists, of broad a) in cough and trough, rhyming with off and scoff.

OW.

55. The regular sound of this diphthong, the same as the regular sound of ou, is heard in how, now, down, town, tower, &c. It has the sound of long o in below, bestow, blow, crow, flow, flown, grow, grown, growth, glow, know, known, owe, own, owner, show, snow, sown, strow, throw, thrown; also in the following words, in some of their senses: bow, low, lower, mow, shower, sow.

56. When this diphthong forms an unaccented syllable, it has the slight sound of long o, as in borrow, follow, follower.

UA.

57. When both of the letters of this diphthong are sounded, they have the power of wa, as in equal, language, persuade, suavity. In some words the u is silent, as in guard, guardian, guarantee, piquant; and in victuals and victualling both the letters are silent.

UE.

58. When these letters are united in a diphthong, and are both sounded, they have the power of we, as in consuetude, desuetude, mansuetude, conquest. In some words the u is silent, as in guerdon, guess, guest. When this diphthong is final, the e is in many words silent, as in due, hue, pursue, value, &c.; and in some words both letters are silent, as in league, fatigue, harangue, tongue, plague, vague, fugue, brogue, antique, oblique, decalogue, demagogue, dialogue, &c.—In the termination ogue, the o is short when preceded by g or l, as demagŏgue, dialŏgue,—except coilŏgue; but when any other consonant precedes o, it is long; as, brōgue, rōgue, vōgue, prorōgue.

UI.

59. These letters, when they are united in a diphthong, and both are sounded, have the power of wi, as in anguish, languid, vanquish. In some words the u is silent, as in guide, guile, build, guinea; and in others the i is silent, as in juice, pursuit, fruit, &c.

SOUNDS OF THE CONSONANTS.

60. The consonants are conventionally divided into mutes and semi-vowels; but this division is not a strictly scientific one. A more exact division is that into voiceless and voiced or sonant consonants. The mutes cannot be made truly vocal without the aid of a vowel. They are b, d, k, p, t, and c and g hard.

61. The so-called semi-vowels have an imperfect sound of themselves. Some are not really vocalized, but are mere breathings, like f and s. The semi-vowels are f, l, m, n, r, s, v, x, z, and c and g soft.

62. The four semi-vowels, l, m, n, and r, are also called liquids, because they readily unite with other consonants, flowing, as it were, into their sounds. Some writers consider v as a liquid; others add w to the list.

63. The following consonants are styled dentals, namely, d, j, s, t, z, and g soft, being pronounced chiefly by the aid of the teeth; d, g, j, k, l, n, and q are called palatals, from the use made of the palate in pronouncing them; b, p, f, v, and m are called labials, being pronounced chiefly by the lips; m, n, and the digraph ng are called nasals, being sounded "through the nose;" and k, q, and c and g hard are called gutturals, being sounded by the throat.

B.

64. B, preceded by m in the same syllable, is generally silent; as, lamb, limb, comb, dumb, &c.; but succumb is an exception. It is silent also before t in the same syllable, as in debt, doubt, redoubt, &c.

C.

65. This letter is hard, and sounds like k, before a, o, and u; and it is soft, and sounds like s, before e, i, and y; except in sceptic and scirrhus and their derivatives, in which it is hard, like k. In the words indict, indicter, indictable, and indictment, c is silent.

66. When c comes after the accent, and is followed by ea, ia, io, and eous, it takes, like s and t under the same circumstances, the sound of sh; as, ocean, social, tenacious, cetaceous.

In the words discern, sacrifice, and suffice, and in several words derived from them, and also in the word sice, c has the sound of z.

CH.

67. The regular English sound of this digraph is the same as that of tch or tsh; as in chair, child, rich, church. In words derived from the French, it has the sound of sh; as in chaise, chagrin, machine. When the digraph ch follows l or n, as in belch, bench, filch, Walker, Jameson, and Fulton designate its sound by sh, as belsh, bensh, filsh; but other orthoepists, Sheridan, Perry, Jones, Knowles, and Smart, give to ch thus situated the same sound as it has in rich.

68. In words derived from the Greek and Latin languages, the digraph ch is generally hard like k; as in alchemy, anarch, anarchy, anchor, anchoret, cachexy, catechism, chalcography, chalybeate, chameleon, chamomile, chaos, character, chasm, chely, chemistry, chimera, chirography, chiromancy, choler, chord, chorography, chorus, chyle, chyme, cochleary, conch, distich, echinus, echo, epoch, eunuch, hemistich, hierarch, hierarchy, machinal, machination, mechanic, mechanism, monarch, monarchical, orchestra, orchestre, pentateuch, scheme, schesis, scholar, school, stomach, stomachic, &c. The exceptions are charity, chart, and charter. Ch is hard in all words in which it is followed by l or r; as chlorosis, Christian, &c.

69. When arch, signifying chief, begins a word from the Greek language, and is followed by a vowel, it is pronounced ark; as in archangel, architect, archive, archipelago, archetype, archiepiscopal, archidiaconal, architrave, archaism, archæology; but when arch is prefixed to an English word, it is pronounced so as to rhyme with march; as, archbishop, archduke, arch-fiend.

In drachm, schism, and yacht, ch is silent.

D.

70. The termination ed, assumed by the preterite and participle, in some words takes the sound of d, added to the preceding syllable; as, healed, sealed, pronounced heald, seald; and in some it takes the sound of t, added in the same manner; as, distressed, mixed, pronounced distrest, mixt. Some words which when used as participles are pronounced in one syllable, are when used as adjectives pronounced in two; as, learned, blessed, winged. (See No. 15.)

F.

71. This letter has always the same sound, except in the preposition of, in which it has the sound of v.

G.

72. G, like c, has two sounds, one hard, and the other soft. It is hard before a, o, and u. An exception is gaol, which is commonly written, as well as pronounced, jail.

G followed by n at the beginning of a word is silent; as, gnarl, gnash, gnat, gnaw, gnomon, gnomonics. It is also silent when followed by n at the end of a word; as, arraign, assign, benign, campaign, champaign, condign, deign, design, ensign, expugn, feign, foreign, impregn, impugn, malign, oppugn, reign, resign, sovereign.

73. G before e, i, and y is sometimes hard and sometimes soft. It is generally soft at the beginning of words derived from the Greek, Latin, and French, and hard at the beginning of words from the Anglo-Saxon; and these last, being much the smaller number of the words of this sort, may be regarded as exceptions.

74. It is hard before e in gear, geck, geese, geld, gelding, gelt, get, gewgaw, shagged, snagged, cragged, ragged, scragged, dogged, rugged, dagger, stagger, swagger, trigger, dogger, pettifogger, tiger, anger, eager, auger, finger, linger, conger, longer, stronger, younger, longest, strongest, youngest; before i in gibber, gibberish, gibbous, gibcat, giddy, gift, gig, giggle, giggler, gild, gill, gimlet, gimp, gird, girdle, girl, girt, girth, gizzard, begin, give, forgive, biggin, piggin, noggin, druggist, waggish, hoggish, sluggish, rigging, digging, &c.; before y in boggy, cloggy, craggy, foggy, dreggy, jaggy, knaggy, muggy, quaggy, scraggy, shaggy, snaggy, swaggy, twiggy.

75. The g in longer (the comparative of long), stronger, younger, longest, strongest, and youngest must articulate the e; and these words are pronounced as if written with gg. Thus, longer, the comparative of long, is pronounced long'ger; and longer, one who longs, long'er.—For some remarks on the sound of g as connected with n, see No. 82.

GH.

76. In this digraph, at the beginning of a word, the h is silent, as in ghost, ghastly, gherkin; in burgh, h is silent at the end of the word; at the end of words, both letters are commonly silent, as in high, nigh, sigh, thigh, neigh, weigh, inveigh, sleigh, bough, dough, though, although, plough, furlough, through, thorough, borough. In some words this digraph has the sound of f, as in enough, rough, tough, trough, cough, chough, laugh, laughter; in some, the sound of k, as in hough, shough, lough. In slough it is sometimes silent, and sometimes has the sound of f; and it is silent also, according to Walker, in clough when used in the sense of cliff.

This combination of letters, ough, at the end of words, has no less than seven different sounds, which are exhibited in the following lines, extracted from Notes and Queries, Vol. IV.:

> "'Tis not an easy task to show
> How o u g h sound; since, though
> An Irish lough and English slough,
> And cough and hiccough, all allow,
> Differ as much as tough and through,
> There seems no reason why they do."

GHT.

77. In this termination the letters gh are always silent; as, fight, right, height, &c.; except in draught, which is pronounced, and in some of its senses usually written, draft.

H.

78. This letter is a note of aspiration, and it is silent at the beginning of a number of words; as, heir, heiress, honor, honesty, honorable, hostler, hour,

&c. In hospital, humble, humor, humorous, humorsome, herb, herbage, &c., according to some orthoepists it is silent, and according to others it is sounded. It is always silent after r; as in rheum, rhetoric, rhapsody, &c.

J, K.

79. J has the same sound as soft g. K has the same sound as c hard; and it is always silent before n; as in knee, kneel, know, &c.

L.

80. L is silent in many words; as in calf, half, chalk, talk, balm, calm, would, could, should, &c.

M.

81. M always preserves its sound, except in accompt, accomptant, and comptroller, pronounced, and also more commonly written, account, accountant, and controller.

N.

82. N has two sounds, one simple and pure, as in man, not; the other compound and mixed, or nasal, called also by Walker its "ringing sound," which is heard in king, angle, thank, concord, banquet, anxious. This sound is given to n in many words, when this letter precedes k, c or g hard, qu, or x. It is accurately expressed as it is written, when g follows n at the end of a word, as king, hang; but in other cases the sound of g is interposed between the n and the succeeding letter; as, angle (ang'gle), thank (thangk), concord (cong'cord), banquet (bang'quet). In many words in which a syllable ending with g hard is followed by another syllable, the sound of g is given to the two syllables; as, stronger (strong'ger) (see No. 75), anger (ang'ger), finger (fing'ger). But in bringer, hanger, ringer, singer, slinger, springer, and stringer, g is sounded only in the first syllable.

The following is a list of most of the principal words in which, according to the best English orthoepists, the letter n has this mixed or ringing sound: anchor, anger, angle, anguish, angular, ankle, anxious, bank, banquet, blank, blanket, brink, bungle, cancrine, canker, clangor, concord, concourse, conger, congress, crank, clank, clink, dangle, dank, drunk, English, finger, flank, function, fungous, gangrene, gingle, hank, hanker, hunger, ink, jangle, jingle, language, languish, languor, lank, linger, link, mangle, mingle, mink, monger, mongrel, monkey, pink, rancor, rank, rankle, sanguine, shingle, single, singular, sink, sprinkle, sunk, tangle, tank, thank, think, uncle, unguent, vanquish, wink, wrinkle, Yankee, zinc.

It may be hardly necessary to respell most of the words of this class in order to give their pronunciation, as, in their common orthography, they are naturally pronounced correctly, with the appropriate sound of the g.

83. N is mute when it ends a syllable and is preceded by l or m, as in kiln, hymn, limn, column, autumn, solemn, condemn, contemn, &c.

P.

84. P is silent before s and t at the beginning of words, as in psalm, psalter, ptisan.

PH.

85. This digraph generally has the sound of f, as in physic, philosophy, &c. In nephew (according to all the principal English orthoepists) and in Stephen it has the sound of v; and in triphthong, naphtha, &c., the h is silent.

Q.

86. Q is always followed by u, and the digraph qu has commonly the sound of kw, as in queen, quill, quart; but in many words, mostly derived from the French, it has the sound of k, as in coquet, etiquette, masquerade, mosque, liquor, &c.

R.

87. The letter r has a jarring or trilling effect on the tongue, and is never silent. It has a peculiar influence both on the long and on the short sound of the vowels. It has the effect, under certain circumstances, to change the short sound of a, as in man, into its Italian sound, as in far, and the short sound of o, as in not, into its broad sound, like a, as in nor; and it has a corresponding effect on the short sound of the other vowels. (See page 11.) When r is preceded by a long vowel it has sometimes the effect of blending the syllables. Thus, the monosyllables hire, lore, more, roar, sore, and flour are pronounced precisely like the dissyllables higher, lower, mower, rower, sower, and flower. These latter words, and also bower, cower, dower, power, tower, and some others, are regarded as dissyllables in prose, but are all commonly pronounced as monosyllables in poetry.

88. There is a difference of opinion among orthoepists respecting the letter r. Johnson says that "it has one constant sound in English;" and the same view of it is taken by Kenrick, Sheridan, Perry, Jones, Jameson, and Knowles. Walker, on the contrary, says, "There is a distinction in the sound of this letter scarcely ever noticed by any of our writers on the subject, which is, in my opinion, of no small importance, and that is the rough and the smooth r." The following is the view given by Smart: "R is a decided consonant when it begins a syllable, with or without another consonant, as in ray, pray; and also when it ends a syllable, if it should be so circumstanced that, ending one, it also begins the next, as in arid, tarry, peril, berry, spirit, florid, hurry. Here the r has the same effect on the previous vowel that any other consonant would have,—that is to say, it stops, or renders the vowel essentially short. But, under other circumstances, final r is not a decided consonant; and therefore the syllables ar, er, ir, or, ur, are not coincident, as to the vowel sound in each, with at, et, it, ot, ut; neither do the vowel sounds in fare, mere, ire, ore, ure, poor, our, quite identify with those in fate, mete, ide, ode, cube, pool, owl." The later students of speech-sounds find several variations of the r sound, as well as of most other consonants.

89. The regular or genuine sound of s is its sharp, sibilant, or hissing sound, like c soft, as in son, this. It has also a flat or soft sound (called by some its vocal sound), the same as that of the letter z, as in wise, his.

90. S (except in the digraph sh) has almost always its sharp, hissing sound at the beginning of words, as son, safe; also at the end of words when they terminate in as, except the words as, has, was, whereas, and the plural of nouns ending in ea, as seas, pleas (also such plurals as stanzas, vistas); in all words ending in ss, as less, express; in all words ending in is, except the monosyllables is and his; in all words ending in us and ous, as genius, famous; in all words when it is preceded in the same syllable by either of the mutes k, p, t, or by f, as locks, hats, caps, muffs. In the prefix dis, s in some cases has its vocal sound.

91. S final has the sound of z when it immediately follows any consonant, except the mutes k, p, t, the semi-vowel f, and th aspirated, as in ribs, heads, hens; also when it forms an additional syllable with e before it, in the plural of nouns and the third person singular of verbs, as in churches, boxes, prices, charges, teaches; likewise in some verbs ending in se, to distinguish them from nouns and adjectives of the same form, as abuse, use, close, diffuse, as distinguished from the nouns abuse, use, and the adjectives close, diffuse. But it is impossible to give rules which will enable one to determine in all cases how s is to be pronounced, whether with its sharp, hissing sound, or with its voiced or soft sound, like z.

92. S aspirated, or sounding like SH or ZH.—S takes the sound of sh in words ending in sion preceded by a consonant, as in diversion, expulsion, dimension, passion, mission, &c.; also in the following words: censure, tensure, tonsure, sensual, fissure, scissure, pressure, compressure, impressure, sure, assure, insure, nauseate, nauseous, sensual, sugar, sumach.

93. S has the sound of zh in the termination sion preceded by a vowel, as in evasion, cohesion, decision, explosion, contusion, &c.; also in a number of words in which s is preceded by an accented vowel, and followed by the termination ure, as in measure, pleasure, displeasure, treasure, rasure, closure, disclosure, enclosure, exposure, composure, incisure, leisure; also in several words ending in sier, as crosier, osier, hosier, brasier, grasier; also in ambrosia, ambrosial, elysium, elysian; also in the words abscission, scission, and rescission.

94. T, like s and c, is aspirated when it comes immediately after the accent and is followed by the vowels ia, ie, or io, taking the sound, in these cases, of sh; as in partial, patient, nation, partition, militia, negotiate, &c.

TH.

95. This digraph has two sounds,—one voiceless, hard, sharp, or aspirate, as in thin, think, earth, breath, &c.; the other flat, soft, or vocal, as in this, the, then, breathe, &c.

96. At the beginning of words this digraph is generally sharp, as in thin, thorn. The exceptions are the following words, with their compounds: the, this, that, thou, thee, thy, thine, they, their, theirs, them, these, those, there, therefore, then, thence, thither, though, thus. At the end of words it is generally sharp, as in death, breath, &c.; but at the end of some verbs it is flat, as, to smooth, to mouth, to bequeath; also in the following, which are written with a final e: to bathe, to breathe, to clothe, to loathe, to sheathe, to soothe, to swathe, to wreathe.

97. In some nouns it is sharp in the singular, as in bath, lath, path, oath, mouth; and flat in the plural, as baths, laths, paths, oaths, mouths.

V.

98. V has only one sound, as in vale, vote; and it is never silent, except (according to some orthoepists) in twelvemonth.

W, WH.

99. W at the beginning of words is a consonant. It is silent before r; as, write, wren, wrist, &c.

The digraph wh is sounded much as if it were reversed, thus, hw; as, when, while, pronounced hwen, hwile. In some words the w is silent; as, who, whole, &c.

X.

100. The regular sound of x is its sharp sound, like ks; as, excellent, execute, expect, tax.

101. It has a flat or soft sound, like gz, when the next syllable following begins with an accented vowel, as in exalt, example, exert, executor; also in some words derived from primitives in which it has the sound of gz, as, exaltation, exemplary.

102. At the beginning of words it has the sound of z, as in Xenophon, xylography.

103. X takes the sound of ksh when the accent precedes it; as, fluxion, anxious, luxury.

Y, Z.

104. Y, consonant, has always the same sound. —Z has the same sound as flat or soft s. It is aspirated, taking the sound of zh, in a few words; as, brazier, glazier, grazier, vizier, seizure, &c.

ACCENT.

105. All the words of the English language of more than one syllable have one accented syllable; and most polysyllabic words have not only a syllable with a primary accent, but also one with a secondary accent.

106. It is the general tendency of the language to place the accent on the first syllable of dissyllables, and on the antepenultimate of polysyllables. The exceptions, however, are so numerous that this is not to be regarded as a rule, but only as a general tendency of the language. With respect, however, to verbs of two syllables, the tendency is to place the accent on the second syllable.

107. A large part of the words of the English language, especially of the polysyllables, are derived from the Latin and Greek languages, and with respect to the accent of such words these languages have a great influence; though in relation to many of them the analogy of the English prevails over that of the original language.

108. Words which are adopted from the Latin language into the English without any change of orthography, generally retain the Latin accent, especially if they are terms of the arts and sciences, or words somewhat removed from common use. The following words have the accent on the penultimate syllable both in Latin and in English: abdomen, acumen, asylum, bitumen, curator, decorum, delator, dictator, horizon, spectator, testator.

109. Some words which have the accent on the penult in Latin are conformed to the English analogy, and have the accent on the antepenult; as, auditor, character, cicatrix, orator, minister, plethora, senator, sinister.

110. Monosyllables are generally marked, in pronouncing dictionaries, with the distinct sound of the vowels as they are pronounced when uttered distinctly; but, in reading and speaking, many of them, especially the particles a, an, the, and, at, of, in, on, &c., are generally uttered so as to give only an indistinct or obscure sound to the vowel.

111. Simple words of two syllables have only one syllable accented, except the word amen, which, Walker says, "is the only word in the language which has necessarily two consecutive accents." There are, however, many compound words of two syllables which have, or may have, both syllables more or less accented; as, backslide, downfall, gainsay, henceforth, mankind, highway, light-house, sometimes, waylay, windmill, almost, &c.

112. Many words of three and of four syllables have only one accented syllable; as, sensible, penalty, reliance, occurrence, republic, admirable, agreeable, celebrity, congenial, chalybeate, &c. But some have a secondary accent almost as strong as the primary; as, advertise, artisan, partisan, complaisant, caravan, charlatan, domineer, privateer, violin, countermand, reprimand, contraband, commodore, reprehend, benefactor, malefactor, navigator, regulator, legislator, detrimental, judicature, caricature, animadvert, &c.

113. Almost all words of more than four syllables have both a primary and a secondary accent, and some words of seven or eight syllables have one primary and two secondary accents; as, indivisibility, incomprehensibility.

114. The following dissyllables, when used as nouns or adjectives, have the accent on the first syllable, and when used as verbs, on the second:

Nouns or Adjectives.	Verbs.	Nouns or Adjectives.	Verbs.
Ab'ject	ab-ject'	Ex'ile	ex-ile'
Ab'sent	ab-sent'	Fer'ment	fer-ment'

115. Of the words in the preceding table, cement, complot, increase, perfume, permit, retail, survey, and undress, when used as nouns, are often pronounced with the accent on the second syllable. (See these words in the Dictionary.) The words consult, contents, and detail, as nouns, are often pronounced, in accordance with this analogy, with the accent on the first syllable.

116. The following trisyllables, and a few others, when nouns, are accented on the first syllable, and when verbs, on the third:

Nouns.	Verbs.
Coun'tercharge	countercharge′
Coun'tercharm	countercharm′
Coun'tercheck	countercheck′
Coun'termand	countermand′
Coun'termarch	countermarch′
Coun'termine	countermine′
Coun'terplot	counterplot′
Coun'terpoise	counterpoise′
Coun'tersign	countersign′
Coun'tervail	countervail′
In'terchange	interchange′
In'terdict	interdict′
O'vercharge	overcharge′
O'verflow	overflow′
O'vermatch	overmatch′
O'verthrow	overthrow′
O'verturn	overturn′
Rep'rimand	reprimand′

117. A similar analogy has influence in changing the accent of many other words which are used as verbs and also as nouns or adjectives. Thus, counterbalance and overbalance, when nouns, have the accent on the first syllable, and when verbs, on the third; attribute, as a noun, is accented on the first syllable, and as a verb, on the second; and misconduct, as a noun, is accented on the second syllable, and as a verb, on the third. A class of words with the termination ate have the distinct sound of long a when used as verbs, and the indistinct or obscure sound of a when used as nouns or adjectives; of this class are deliberate, intimate, mediate, moderate, &c. The words interest and compliment, when used as verbs, are pronounced with a more distinct sound of short e, in the last syllable, than when used as nouns. The verb to prophesy has the full sound of long y, and the noun prophecy the obscure sound of y or e. So the whole class of verbs ending in fy are pronounced with the distinct sound of long y.

118. The pronunciation of the following words when used as nouns or adjectives is different from what it is when used as verbs:

Nouns or Adjectives.	Verbs.	Nouns or Adjectives.	Verbs.
Abuse	abuse	Grease	grease
Advice	advise	House	house
Close	close	Mouse	mouse
Device	devise	Prophecy	prophesy
Diffuse	diffuse	Rise	rise
Excuse	excuse	Use	use

The following words, when used as nouns, have an accent different from their accent as adjectives:

Nouns.	Adjectives.	Nouns.	Adjectives.
Au'gust	august′	In'stinct	instinct′
Com'pact	compact′	Invalid′	inval'id
Ex'ile	exile′	Min'ute	minute′
Gallant′	gal'lant	Su'pine	supine′

119. All words ending in sion and tion have the accent on the penultimate syllable; as, dissen'sion, declara'tion, medita'tion, &c.

120. Words ending in ia, iac, ial, ian, eous, and ious have the accent on the preceding syllable; as, rega'lia, demo'niac, impe'rial, merid'ian, sponta'neous, melo'dious. If c, g, s, t, or x precedes the vowel e or i in these terminations, these vowels are generally blended with the vowel or vowels which follow, being pronounced with them in one syllable; as, benefi'cial, magi'cian, farina'ceous, loqua'cious, dissen'sious, coura'geous, conta'gious, conten'tious, anx'ious. The only exception to this rule, in relation to placing the accent, is the word elegiac, which is commonly pronounced elegi'ac, though some pronounce it, in accordance with the rule, ele'giac.

121. Words ending in acal and ical have the accent on the antepenultimate syllable; as, heli'acal, alphabet'ical, fanat'ical, geograph'ical, poet'ical, &c. In words of this termination, the vowels in the accented syllables, if followed by a consonant, are short, except u, which is long; as, cu'bical, mu'sical, scorbu'tical.

122. Words ending in ic generally have the accent on the penultimate syllable; as, algebra'ic, metal'lic, epidem'ic, scientif'ic, harmon'ic, paralyt'ic. If a consonant immediately precedes the i, the vowels in the accented syllables are short, except the vowel u, which is long if it is followed by a single consonant; as, cheru'bic, scorbu'tic, sulphu'ric, tellu'ric, &c. But if u is followed by two consonants it is sometimes short; as, fus'tic, rus'tic; and sometimes long; as, ru'bric, lu'bric. The following words, which are exceptions to this rule, have the accent on the antepenultimate syllable: ar'senic (as a noun), arith'metic, bish'opric, cath'olic, chol'eric, ephem'eric, her'etic, lu'natic, pol'itic, rhet'oric, and tur'meric. The following words, climacteric, empiric, phlegmatic, plethoric, splenetic, according to some orthoepists are conformed to the rule, and according to others they are exceptions to it.

123. Words of three or more syllables, ending in eal, have their accent on the antepenultimate syllable; as, bo'real, corpo'real, incorpo'real, cu'neal, empyr'eal, ethe'real, fune'real, homoge'neal, heteroge'neal, lue'teal, lin'eal, or'deal; except hymene'al, which has the penultimate accent.

124. Of words ending in ean, the following, being conformed to the English analogy, have the accent on the antepenultimate syllable: cerbe'rean, ceru'lean, hyperbo'rean, Hercu'lean, marmo'rean, mediterra'nean, subterra'nean, Tarta'rean; but the following are pronounced by the principal orthoepists, in accordance with the best usage, with the accent on the penultimate: adamante'an, antipode'an, Atlante'an, colosse'an, empyre'an, Epicure'an, Europe'an, hymene'an, pygme'an. With regard to European, Walker remarks as follows: "This word, according to the analogy of our own language, ought certainly to have the accent on the second syllable; and this is the pronunciation which unlettered speakers constantly adopt; but the learned, ashamed of the analogies of their own tongue, always place the accent on the third syllable, because Europæus has the penultimate long, and is therefore accented in Latin. Epicurean has the accent on the same syllable, by the same rule; while herculean and cerulean submit to English analogy, and have their accent on the second syllable, because their penultimate in Latin is short."

125. Words ending in tude, efy, ify, ety, ity, graphy, logy, loquy, athy, metry, tomy, meter, gonal, fluous, fluent, and parous, have their accent on the antepenultimate; as, for'titude, rar'efy, diver'sify, va-ri'ety, liberal'ity, geog'raphy, geol'ogy, solil'oquy, sym'-pathy, geom'etry, anat'omy, barom'eter, diag'onal, super'fluous, af'fluent, ovip'arous.

126. Words of three or more syllables, ending in ulous, inous, erous, and orous, have the accent on the antepenultimate; as, sed'ulous, volu'minous, vo-cif'erous, carniv'orous; except cano'rous and sono'-rous, which have the accent on the penultimate.

127. Words of three or more syllables, ending in ative, have the accent on the antepenultimate, or on the preceding syllable; as, rel'ative, appel'lative, commu'nicative, spec'ulative. The exceptions are crea'tive, colla'tive, dila'tive.

128. Words ending in tive, preceded by a consonant, have the accent on the penultimate; as, attrac'tive, invec'tive, presump'tive; except ad'jective and sub'stantive.

129. There is a class of adjectives ending in ose, as, acetose, adipose, anhelose, operose, &c., with respect to which there is much diversity among orthoepists in relation to placing the principal accent. Walker says, "From the decided prevalence of the accent on the last syllable of these words, we may easily guess at the analogy of pronunciation, and, with very little hesitation, determine that the accent ought to be placed on the last syllable of them all." Smart, however, and some other respectable orthoepists, place the primary accent of a great part of this class of words on the first, or antepenultimate, syllable. But with respect to most of these words the primary and secondary accents are so nearly equal that it is of little importance whether the primary accent is placed on the last or on the first or antepenultimate syllable; that is, whether the following words are noted thus, ăd-i-pōse′, ăn-he-lōse′, ŏp-e-rōse′, or thus, ăd′i-pōse, ăn′he-lōse, ŏp′e-rōse. A few of these words are erroneously pronounced by some orthoepists with the accent on the penultimate syllable; as, a-cē′tose.

130. There is a class of words ending in or, which, when used in law language in connection with their correlative terms, have the accent on the last syllable. The following words, with their correlatives, are of this class:

Appellor	appellee	Grantor	grantee
Assignor	assignee	Guarantor	guarantee
Bargainor	bargainee	Legator	legatee
Consignor	consignee	Mortgageor	mortgagee
Devisor	devisee	Obligor	obligee
Donor	donee	Recognizor	recognizee

ORTHOEPY AND ORTHOEPISTS.

The pronunciation of the English language, like that of all living languages, is in a great measure arbitrary. It is exposed to the caprices of fashion and taste. It is liable to change from one age to another; and it varies, more or less, not only in the different and distantly-separated countries in which it is spoken, but also in the different divisions and districts of the same country. No two speakers or orthoepists, though inhabitants of the same place, would be likely to agree in the pronunciation of all its words. The standard of pronunciation is not the authority of any dictionary, or of any orthoepist; but it is the present usage of literary and well-bred society.

The question may be asked, Where is this standard to be sought, or this usage to be ascertained? To this it may be answered that London is the great metropolis of English literature, and that it has an incomparably greater influence than any other city in giving law, in relation to style and pronunciation, to the many millions who write and speak the language. The English orthoepists naturally refer to the usage of the best society in London as their principal standard; but the usage of good society in that city is not uniform, and no two orthoepists would perfectly agree with each other in attempting to exhibit it.

It may be further asked, How far is it proper for the people of the United States to be guided in their pronunciation by the usages of London? To this it may be answered that it is advisable for American speakers, as well as writers, to conform substantially to the best models, wherever they may be found; and so long as London holds its rank as the great metropolis of the literature of the English language, so long it must have a predominant influence with respect to speaking and writing it. If the influence of the usage of London were discarded, where should we seek for a usage that would be generally acknowledged as entitled to higher authority? There is no one city in the United States which holds a corresponding rank as a centre of intelligence and fashion,—no one which is the central and undisputed metropolis of Anglo-American literature, as London is of English literature. Pronunciation in the United States is, indeed, now substantially conformed to the usage of London. The works of some of the English orthoepists, who have regarded the usage of London as their standard, have been as generally circulated and used in this country as they have been in England; and there is undoubtedly a more general conformity to the London usage in pronunciation throughout the United States than there is throughout Great Britain.

Although it is not to be questioned that, with respect to the many millions who speak the English language, the usage of London is entitled to far more weight than that of any other city, yet this is not the only thing to be observed. The usage of the best society in the place or district in which one resides is not to be disregarded. If our pronunciation is agreeable to the analogy of the language, and conformed to the practice of the best society with which we have intercourse, we may have no sufficient reason to change it, though it should deviate, more or less, from the existing usage of London. A proper pronunciation is indeed a desirable accomplishment, and is indicative of a correct taste and a good education; still it ought to be remembered that, in speech as in manners, rusticity is more excusable than affectation.

"For pronunciation," says Dr. Johnson, "the best general rule is to consider those as the most elegant speakers who deviate least from the written words." There are many words of which the pronunciation in England is, at present, better conformed to the spelling than it was formerly; and the principle of conformity of the manner of writing to that of speaking the language has been carried somewhat farther in the United States than in England. This is a principle which seems worthy of being encouraged rather than checked. With respect to the want of conformity of the pronunciation of words to their orthography, Smart says, "Fortunately, the number of these anomalies is daily decreasing, so that many words which, in Walker's Dictionary, are marked as having a customary irregular pronunciation, appear in this with their regular sounds, and yet with usage in their favor."

Much ingenuity and labor have been employed by various orthoepists in their efforts to settle the pronunciation of the language; and different systems of notation for designating the sounds of the letters have been adopted. But it has been found difficult to form such a system as will correctly represent all the various sounds of the letters, and not be liable to mistake; and if such a system were formed, it would be a difficult and delicate matter to make a correct application of it to all cases. The language, as it respects pronunciation, has many irregularities, which cannot be subjected to any general rules; and with regard to the pronunciation of particular words, the instances are numerous in relation to which there is a disagreement among the best orthoepists.

The following table exhibits the manner in which the pronunciation of a number of words is represented by Sheridan, Walker, Jameson, and Smart, together with the mode adopted in this work. These several orthoepists have each his own peculiar system of notation; but as their different methods of marking the letters cannot be here exhibited without much inconvenience, and without causing great confusion to the reader, their respective modes of the respelling of the words are presented; and instead of their marks on the vowels, those employed in this work are substituted, indicating, in all cases, the sounds of the letters as given by them.

In relation to all the words here exhibited, these orthoepists agree with respect to two of the most important points in the pronunciation of words, namely, the syllable on which the accent is to be placed, and the quantity of the vowel in the accented syllable. Though with regard to the modes of representing the pronunciation of most of these words there is a considerable diversity, yet it is doubtless true that the pronunciation intended to be expressed differs, in reality, much less than it would seem to do, and that in numerous instances these orthoepists agreed much better in their practice than in their mode of indicating it.

There is an obvious difference in the quantity and in the stress of voice with which the last syllable of the words deliberate and moderate are pronounced when verbs and when adjectives. All these orthoepists mark the a long in the last syllable of these words when used as verbs; Jameson and Smart also mark it long when they are adjectives; Walker shortens the a in the adjective moderate; Sheridan changes the a in both of the words, when adjectives, into short e. But there seems to be no advantage in changing the letter in such cases. It is but slightly pronounced, and has not the distinct sound of either short e or short or long a; and with respect to most of the instances in which the vowels in this Dictionary have a dot placed under them, they are so slightly pronounced that to mark them with a distinct sound, either long or short, would tend rather to mislead than to assist in pronouncing them. If the syllables on which the primary and secondary accents fall are correctly pronounced, the comparatively indistinct syllables will naturally be pronounced aright.

With respect to words variously pronounced, Walker says, "The only method of knowing the extent of custom, in these cases, seems to be an inspection of those dictionaries which professedly treat of pronunciation. We have now so many works of this kind that the general current of custom, with respect to the sound of words, may be collected from them with almost as much certainty as the general sense of words from Johnson. An exhibition of the opinions of orthoepists about the sound of words always appeared to me a very rational method of determining what is called custom. This method I have adopted." The method thus countenanced by Walker has been carried out in this Dictionary much more thoroughly than he had the means of doing it, inasmuch as the greater part of the works which are made use of as the principal authorities have been published since his time. With respect to many of these variously pronounced words, it is difficult to decide what method is to be preferred; and it is not to be supposed that the mode for which the compiler has indicated a preference will in all cases be esteemed the best; but, when it is not, the mode which the reader may deem preferable will be found included within the brackets, and supported by its proper authority.

It may be seen, with respect to words variously pronounced, that a preference is not always given to the mode which has the most support from orthoepists; yet in some instances, in deference to the weight of authorities, the compiler has given a preference to a mode which, in the exercise of his own judgment, independent of the authorities, he would not have preferred; for it would be unreasonable for him to make a conformity to his own taste, or to the result of his own limited observation, a law to those who may differ from him and yet agree with perhaps the more common usage.

In giving the authorities for pronunciation in this Dictionary, neither the respelling nor the notation of the orthoepists cited has generally been exhibited, as it was necessary to reduce them all to one system. Their precise difference is not always presented with exactness; yet the cases of failure are not important. The different editions of the authors used as authorities differ in various instances; and it is sometimes impossible to ascertain whether the intention of the writer has not been frustrated by an error of the press.

The English authorities most frequently cited in this volume are Sheridan, Walker, Perry, Jones, Enfield, Fulton and Knight, Jameson, Knowles, Smart, Reid, and Craig, all of whom are authors of Pronouncing Dictionaries. In addition to these, various other English lexicographers and orthoepists are sometimes brought forward, as Bailey, Johnson, Kenrick, Ash, Barclay, Entick, Scott, Ogilvie, Boag, Clarke, Wright, Nares, and several others, besides the distinguished American lexicographer, Dr. Webster. The edition of Webster's Dictionary made use of is that of 1841, which is the latest that was published during the life of the author.

The different English orthoepists who are made use of as authorities are entitled to very different degrees of respect. There is no one of them who has obtained a higher and more widely extended reputation than Walker; and no one appears to have bestowed longer and more patient attention in studying the analogies of the language, and in ascertaining the best usage. But there has been considerable change since his time; and some who have succeeded him have corrected some of his mistakes, and made improvements on his system; and they may, in many cases, be considered better guides as to the present usage than Walker.

Of the successors of Walker, Mr. Smart appears to have given the most careful and discriminating attention to the subject; and he may therefore be regarded as the best single authority for present English usage.

ORTHOGRAPHY.

REMARKS—WITH RULES OF ORTHOGRAPHY.

1. The orthography of the English language has been undergoing continual changes from the time of its first formation to the present day, although for a century or upwards it may be regarded as having assumed a comparatively settled form. If we look into books printed in the reign of Queen Anne, we meet with many words having an orthography different from that which is now in use. If we carry our observation back as far as the reign of Queen Elizabeth, we find the difference in orthography greatly increased; and when, in our retrospective examination, we reach the age of Chaucer and Wickliffe, we find many words which, though they are now actually in use, are so disguised in their orthographical form, and are of so odd and uncouth an apppearance, that they can hardly be recognized.

2. The early productions of English literature which are still much read, such as the works of Bacon, Hooker, Shakespeare, and the common version of the Bible, appear now in an orthography very different from that in which they were at first printed. The first four verses of the thirty-second chapter of Deuteronomy, in the first edition of the common version of the Bible, printed in 1611, stands thus: "Giue eare, O yee heauens, and I wil speake; and heare, O earth, the words of my mouth. My doctrine shall drop as the raine; my speach shall distill as the deaw, as the smal raine vpon the tender herbe, and as showres vpon the grasse. Because I wil publish the Name of the Lord; ascribe yee greatnesse vnto our God. He is the rocke, his worke is perfect: for all his wayes are Iudgement: A God of trueth, and without iniquity, iust and right is he." In these few lines, which may be taken as a specimen of the whole, there are twenty-seven instances in which the words appear in an orthography different from that in which they are now printed. It is not uncommon to find the same word spelt in more ways than one on the same page, as is often the case with works even of the most distinguished writers printed in the early ages of English literature.

3. In adjusting the orthography of this Dictionary much care has been taken; in performing the work attention has been paid to etymology, analogy, and usage; and in cases in which good usage is divided, etymology and analogy have been consulted in deciding disputable points. But no innovation has been made with respect to those cases in which usage is invariable and settled.

4. With respect to orthography, the best usage in America differs very little from the best usage in England. There is a class of words ending in or or our, all of which, unless Saviour may be regarded as an exception, are commonly written in this country without the u; as, error, favor, honor, terror, &c. But although the greater part of the words ending in or or our are written in England without the u, yet there are a few of these words, of very frequent occurrence, most of them dissyllables, which are commonly written in England with the u; as, favour, honour, &c.

5. A numerous class of words formerly written with the termination ick, as musick, publick, are now written, both in England and the United States, with the termination ic; as, music, public. But the verbs to frolic, to mimic, to physic, to traffic, to bivouac, though written without the k in the present tense, yet on assuming another syllable, in forming the past tense and participles, the k must be used in order to keep the c hard; as, trafficked, trafficking.

6. Verbs of one syllable ending with a single consonant, preceded by a single vowel (as plan), and verbs of two or more syllables ending in the same manner, and having the accent on the last syllable (as regret), double the final consonant of the verb on assuming an additional syllable; as, plan, planned; regret, regretted. But if a diphthong precedes the last consonant (as in join), or the accent is not on the last syllable (as in suffer), the consonant is not doubled; as, join, joined; suffer, suffered.

There is an exception to the last clause of the preceding rule, with respect to most of the verbs ending in the letter l, which on assuming an additional syllable are allowed, by general usage, to double the l, though the accent is not on the last syllable; as, travel, travelling, travelled, traveller; libel, libelling, libelled, libeller, libellous. But the derivatives of parallel are written without doubling the final l; as, paralleled, unparalleled.—The nouns petal, peril, novel, dial, and viol, on assuming an additional syllable, do not double the l: as, petalous, perilous, novelist, dialist, violist.

The following list comprises the verbs ending in l, which, though they have not the accent on the last syllable, yet commonly double the final l:

apparel	dishevel	handsel	model	rival
bevel	drivel	hatchel	panel	rowel
bowel	duel	imperil	parcel	shovel
cancel	embowel	jewel	pencil	shrivel
carol	empanel	kennel	peril	snivel
cavil	enamel	label	pistol	tassel
channel	equal	level	pommel	trammel
chisel	gambol	libel	quarrel	travel
counsel	gravel	marshal	ravel	tunnel
cudgel	grovel	marvel	revel	unravel

The derivatives of these verbs are sometimes spelt with a single l; and this mode is more or less favored by some lexicographers; and although it accords with the analogy of the language, yet the prevailing usage is to double the l.

7. Some words having a secondary accent on the last syllable double the last letter on assuming an additional syllable. The verb to kidnap always doubles the p on assuming an additional syllable; as, kidnap, kidnapped, kidnapping, kidnapper;—also the following words: compromit, compromitted; carburet, carburetted; sulphuret, sulphuretted;—also various compound words; as, half-wit, half-witted, &c.

8. The verb to bias doubles the s on assuming an additional syllable; as, biassing, biassed, biasser; also the verb to worship commonly doubles the p; as, worship, worshipping, worshipper.

9. There is some diversity in usage with respect to several other verbs ending in p, which, although the accent is not on the last syllable, are sometimes allowed to double the last consonant when another syllable is added. But the more correct and regular mode is to write them without doubling the final consonant; as, gallop, galloping. The derivatives of a few words ending in t are sometimes erroneously written with the t doubled; as, benefitted, instead of benefited; combatted, instead of combated.

10. Most of the words in the English language which end in ise, and almost all which end in ize, are verbs; and with regard to a number of these verbs there is a diversity in the English dictionaries, as well as in common usage, in relation to this termination, the same verbs sometimes ending in ize and sometimes in ise. With regard to this termination, the following rule is generally, though not invariably, observed:

Verbs derived from Greek verbs ending in ιζω, and others formed after the same analogy, have the termination ize; as, agonize, characterize; but words derived from the French prendre have the termination ise; as, apprise, surprise, enterprise.

The following list comprises most of the English verbs which are generally written with the termination ise:

advertise	compromise	emprise	misprise
advise	demise	enfranchise	premise affranchise	despise	enterprise	revise apprise	devise	exercise	supervise
chastise	disfranchise	exorcise	surmise
circumcise	disguise	franchise	surprise
comprise	divertise	merchandise

In relation to the following words—catechise or catechize, criticise or criticize, patronise or patronize, recognise or recognize—the dictionaries and usage are divided, though the most of the dictionaries give the termination ise to these verbs. There are other words with regard to which there is a want of uniformity in usage; as, civilize, disseize, epitomize, &c.

11. There are a few verbs which are derived from nouns ending in th hard or sharp, as in thin, and which have e added to th, making the sound of th soft or vocal, as in this. Such are the following: from bath, bathe; from breath, breathe; from cloth, clothe; from loath, loathe; from sheath, sheathe; from sooth, soothe; from swath, swathe; from wreath, wreathe and inwreathe; but the following verbs are commonly written without a final e, viz., to bequeath, to mouth, and to smooth.

12. Verbs ending in ie change the ie into y on adding ing; as, die, dying; lie, lying; tie, tying.

13. Verbs ending with a single e omit the e when ing is added; as, place, placing; relate, relating.

The following words are exceptions: dye (to color), dyeing; hoe, hoeing; shoe, shoeing: and when ing is added to the verbs singe, swinge, and tinge, the e is properly retained; as, singeing, swingeing, and tingeing, in order to distinguish these participles from singing, swinging, and tinging

14. All verbs ending in y, preceded by a consonant, retain the y on adding ing; as, spy, spying; deny, denying; but when ed is added the y is changed into i; as, spy, spied; deny, denied; and when s is added y is changed into ie; as, spy, spies; deny, denies.

15. Verbs ending in y, preceded by another vowel, on adding ing, ed, or s, do not change y into i; as, delay, delaying, delayed, delays.

The following words are exceptions: lay, laid; pay, paid; say, said; stay, stayed or staid.

16. The greater part of verbal nouns end in er, as from advertise, advertiser; but many of them end in or, as from imitate, imitator; from instruct, instructor; and some are seen in both forms, as visitor, visiter. The verbal nouns from beg and lie are irregularly formed beggar and liar. From peddle the regular verbal noun would be peddler; but the noun is commonly written pedler, and sometimes pedlar.

17. There is a class of words ending in tre, as centre, metre, &c., which are by some written center, meter, &c.; but the former mode is supported by the prevailing usage.

18. There is a numerous class of English adjectives ending in able or ible, amounting to nearly a thousand, more than three-fourths of which end in able. A part of these adjectives are derived from Latin adjectives ending in abilis or ibilis; a few of them are adopted from the French; and many of them are of English growth; and these are chiefly derived from verbs, as from allow, allowable, from move, movable; sometimes from nouns, as from action, actionable, from peace, peaceable.

19. With respect to the orthography of those adjectives which are of English origin, it is difficult to give any general rule; and in some cases it is difficult to determine whether they should end in able or ible; and in a few cases usage is more or less variable; as, addible or addable, conversable or conversible, referrible or referable.

20. Latin adjectives ending in abilis are derived from Latin verbs of the first conjugation; as, mutabilis, from muto, mutare; and from adjectives with this termination in Latin are formed English adjectives ending in able; as, mutable. Latin adjectives ending in ibilis are derived from verbs of the second, third, or fourth conjugation; as, docibilis, from doceo, docere; legibilis, from lego, legere; audibilis, from audio, audire; and from adjectives with this termination in Latin are formed English adjectives ending in ible; as, docible, legible, audible.

21. Derivative adjectives ending in able are written without an e before a; as, blamable, movable, not blameable, moveable; except those of which the primitive word ends in ce or ge; in such the e is retained to soften the preceding consonant; as, peaceable, changeable.

22. Compound words formed by prefixing a word or a syllable to a monosyllable ending in all commonly retain the double l; as, appall, befall, bethrall, downfall, forestall, fuzzball, headstall, install, inthrall, laystall, miscall, overfall, recall, saveall, thumbstall, waterfall, windfall; but some of these words are very often, if not more commonly, seen with a single l; as, appal, befal, bethral, inthral, &c. Withal, therewithal, and wherewithal end with a single l.

23. A class of other compound words commonly retain the final double l which is found in the simple words; as, bridewell, downhill, uphill, molehill, watermill, windmill, handmill. With respect to foretel, enrol, and unrol, or foretell, enroll, and unroll, the authorities and usage are divided.

24. Nouns of the singular number ending in ey form their plural by adding s only to the singular; as, attorney, attorneys; money, moneys; valley, valleys. These plurals are often erroneously written attornies, monies, and vallies.

25. Nouns ending in o, preceded by another vowel, form their plural by the addition of s; as, cameo, cameos; folio, folios; but if the final o is preceded by a consonant the plural is commonly formed by adding es; as, cargo, cargoes. The following nouns, however,—canto, cento, grotto, junto, portico, rotundo, salvo, solo, tyro, duodecimo, octavo, quarto, and some others,—commonly have their plural formed by the addition of s only to the singular; as, canto, cantos. Yet with respect to the plural of some of these words usage is not uniform; as the plural of quarto, for example, is sometimes seen written quartos and sometimes quartoes.

26. There is a class of words which have in their derivation a twofold origin from the Latin and French languages, and are indifferently written with the first syllable en or in, the former being derived from the French and the latter from the Latin. With respect to some of these it is difficult to determine which form is best supported by usage; as, for example, inquire or enquire, insure or ensure. A few of this class of words are found in the following Vocabulary.

27. There is a small class of words ending in ped or pede (L. pes, foot); as, biped, centiped, millepede, multiped, palmiped, plumiped, quadruped, soliped, and a few others. Of these words, biped and quadruped are always written without the final e, but with respect to the others the dictionaries and usage are divided; and although it has heretofore been the more common mode to write most of these words with a final e, yet there seems to be no good reason why they should not all be conformed to the same rule.

28. There is a class of chemical terms many of which signify that which contains the essence of the kind as an extract, and which are variously written with the termination ine or in; as, asparagine, chlorine, olivine, or asparagin, chlorin, olivin; but the prevailing usage with respect to most of these words favors the use of the final e; as, asparagine, chlorine; but tannin and some others are written without a final e.

29. The following words are generally written without an e after g; abridgment, acknowledgment, and judgment; though many write them with it, —abridgement, acknowledgement, and judgement, —as Johnson and other lexicographers spell lodgement.

30. In some cases words are so variously affected by etymology, analogy, and general usage that it is difficult to determine what orthography is best supported; as, for example, connection or connexion, despatch or dispatch, hinderance or hindrance, jail or gaol, preterite or preterit, recognizance or recognisance, shew or show, sceptic or skeptic, thrash or thresh, and various others.

VOCABULARY OF WORDS OF DOUBTFUL OR VARIOUS ORTHOGRAPHY.

The following Vocabulary contains only a few of the words which belong to the several classes referred to in the preceding remarks; but, with the exception of these classes, it comprises nearly all the English words with regard to which a diversity of orthography is now often met with.

The orthography in the left-hand column is deemed to be well authorized, and in most cases preferable; but with respect to the authority of that in the right-hand column there is great diversity. In some cases it is nearly or quite as well authorized as that on the left hand, and in some it has but a very feeble support. Both orthographies of some of the words are right, the words being differently spelt when used in different senses; as, draught or draft, forte or fort, subtile or subtile, abettor or abettor, canvass or canvas, caliber or calibre, controller or comptroller, &c.

FORMATION OF THE ENGLISH LANGUAGE.

THE Saxon or Anglo-Saxon language, which is a branch of the Teutonic, is the parent language of the English. Some of the other north European languages of the Teutonic family which have contributed to enrich the English tongue are the Danish, Swedish, Norwegian, Icelandic, German, and Dutch. The south European languages which have furnished the largest contributions are the Greek, Latin, and French; especially the Latin, through the medium of the French or Norman French; also, the Italian, Spanish, and various other languages have afforded more or less. "Suppose," says Dr. Trench ("English Past and Present"), "the English language to be divided into a hundred parts; of these, to make a rough distribution, sixty would be Saxon, thirty would be Latin (including of course the Latin which has come to us through the French), five would be Greek; we should then have assigned ninety-five parts, leaving the other five—perhaps too large a residue—to be divided among all the other languages from which we have adopted isolated words."

The term Anglo-Saxon is derived from the Angles, a branch of the Saxons of Lower Germany, who invaded England in the fifth century and established their authority in the country. The Anglo-Saxon dynasty, after having continued about six hundred years, was terminated in 1066 by the invasion of William, Duke of Normandy, commonly called the Conqueror. The Norman French now became the language of the court and upper classes, while the late Anglo-Saxon, or Early English, continued to be the only speech of the common people or peasantry. These two languages were gradually blended into one, and became the basis of the present English. The commencement of the English language is, by most of the older authorities, fixed at about the middle of the thirteenth century, what was written in England after that time having much resemblance to the present English; but many late writers on the subject regard the Anglo-Saxon of literature as being the only language entitled to the name of Old English. These writers give the name of Middle English to the language which immediately succeeded the Anglo-Saxon.

The Anglo-Saxon is the language to which the English owes its general form and structure, all the particles on which its syntax depends, all its pronouns and conjunctions, nearly all its prepositions, most of its monosyllables, and, indeed, all the words that are most frequently repeated on the same page. Of the words commonly found on the same page of an English book, a very much larger proportion are Anglo-Saxon than of the words found in an English Dictionary. "The Anglo-Saxon," says Dr. Trench, "is not so much one element of the English language as the foundation of it—the basis. All its joints, its whole articulation, its sinews and its ligaments, the great body of articles, pronouns, conjunctions, prepositions, numerals, auxiliary verbs, all smaller words which serve to knit together and bind the larger into sentences,—these, not to speak of the grammatical structure of the language, are exclusively Saxon. The Latin language may contribute its tale of bricks, yea, of goodly and polished hewn stones, to the spiritual building, but the mortar, with all that holds and binds these together and constitutes them into a house, is Saxon throughout."

The predominance of Anglo-Saxon will readily be seen by analyzing a passage in any common English writer. Take, for example, the common English version of the Lord's Prayer, which contains sixty-six words, of which all except the following five, namely, debt, debtor, deliver, glory, and temptation, are Anglo-Saxon. In the first chapter of the common English version of St. John's Gospel there are one thousand and three words, of which, excepting fifty-three proper names, there are only fifty-five words that are not Anglo-Saxon.

The following are the principal Anglo-Saxon prefixes, namely, a, be, em, en, fore, im, mis, out, over, un, and under; as, *a*head, *be*friend, *em*body, *en*able, *fore*bode, *im*bosom, *mis*deed, *out*do, *over*act, *un*bind, *un*like, and *under*go.

Some of the common Anglo-Saxon terminations are the following, namely, er, ful, hood, less, ly, ness, ship; as, writ*er*, mind*ful*, child*hood*, help*less*, just*ly*, good*ness*, partner*ship*.

The contributions of the Latin language to the English are next in importance and amount to those of the Anglo-Saxon; and these contributions came chiefly through the medium of the French, or Norman French, in consequence of the Norman conquest. It has been stated by some philologists that the English language is indebted to the Latin for the larger part of its vocabulary. This, however, is a greatly exaggerated statement; yet the contributions from that language are great and important, and they enter extensively into the formation and etymology of English words. The Latin has furnished a large portion of the abstract and general terms, especially in the departments of theology, moral and political philosophy, and all the moral sciences; also a great part of the terms used in polite literature and the language of polite life. A great part of the military terms in English come directly from the French.

The following are Latin prefixes:—a, ab, abs, from; as, *a*vert, *ab*jure, *abs*tract;—ad, a, ac, af, ag, al, an, ap, ar, as, at, to; as, *ad*duce, *a*scribe, *ac*cede, *af*fix, *ag*gress, *al*lude, *an*nex, *ap*pend, *ar*range, *as*sign, *at*tach;—ante, before; as, *ante*cedent;—circum, about; as, *circum*jacent;—con, co, cog, col, com, cor, together, with; as, *con*form, *co*ëval, *cog*nate, *col*lect, *com*bine, *cor*rect;—contra, against; as, *contra*dict;—de, down, from; as, *de*face, *de*grade;—dis, di, dif, asunder; as, *dis*arm, *di*vide, *dif*fuse;—e, ex, out of; as, *e*ject, *ex*clude;—extra, beyond; as, *extra*judicial;—in, ig, il, im, ir (when prefixed to a verb), in, into; as, *in*due, *il*lapse, *im*pel, *ir*radiate; (when prefixed to an adjective), not; as, *in*visible, *ig*noble, *il*legal, *im*moral, *ir*regular;—inter, between; as, *inter*mix;—intro, within; as, *intro*duce;—ob, oc, of, op, for, in the way of; as, *ob*ject, *oc*cur, *of*fend, *op*press;—per, through; as, *per*vade;—post, after; as, *post*script;—pre, before; as, *pre*cede;—preter, beyond; as, *preter*natural;—pro, for, forward; as, *pro*consul;—re, back, again; as, *re*turn, *re*build;—retro, backward; as, *retro*spect;—se, aside; as, *se*cede;—sine, without; as, *sine*cure;—sub, suc, suf, sug, sup, sus, under, after; as, *sub*dean, *suc*ceed, *suf*fice, *sug*gest, *sup*plant, *sus*pect;—super, above; as, *super*abound, *super*natural; trans, beyond; as, *trans*cend;—ultra, beyond; as, *ultra*marine.

The following terminations are derived from the Latin or French:—able, ible, cle, ile, ial, al, ian, an, ant, ent, fy, lar, ity, or, ous, tion, tive, tude, ture.

To the Greek the English language is indebted for most of the terms in physical science, and, indeed, for a great part of the terms employed in all the arts and sciences.

The following are Greek prefixes:—a (a), without; as, *a*cephalous;—ana (ἀνά), through, again; as, *ana*baptist;—anti (ἀντί), against; as, *anti*christian;—apo (ἀπό), from; as, *apo*state;—cata (κατά), down, from side to side; as, *cata*logue;—dia (διά), through; as, *dia*gonal;—en, em (ἐν), in, on; as, *en*demic;—epi (ἐπί), upon; as, *epi*demic;—hyper (ὑπέρ), above; as, *hyper*critic;—hypo (ὑπό), under; as, *hypo*crite;—meta (μετά), beyond; as, *meta*physics;—para (παρά), by the side of, near; as, *para*llel;—peri (περί), about; as, *peri*meter;—pro (πρό), before; as, *pro*logue;—syn, sy, syl, sym (σύν), together, with; as, *syn*onymous, *syl*logism.

The following terminations are from the Greek:—ic and ical, from the Greek ικος and Latin icus; as, phys*ical;*—logy, from λόγος; as, theo*logy;*—graphy, from γράφω; as, geo*graphy;*—ize, from ιζω; as, agon*ize.*

FORMATION OF SEVERAL PARTS OF SPEECH.

English nouns are mostly formed by affixing to the radical parts of words the following terminations, namely, an, ame, ant, ar, ard, art, ary, eer, ent, er, ier, ist, ive, or, ster, ate, ee, ite, ery, age, ancy, ence, ency, head, hood, ion, ity, ism, ment, mony, ness, on, ry, ship, t, th, tude, ty, ure, y, dom, cule, cle, el, il, et, in, ine, kin, let, ling, ock, ule.

A great part of the adjectives are formed by affixing to the radical parts of words the following terminations, namely, ac, al, an, ar, ary, en, ic, ical, id, ile, ine, ory, ate, ful, ose, ous, some, y, ish, like, ly, ive, able, ible, uble, less.

Many verbs are formed by affixing to the radical parts of words the following terminations, namely, ate, en, fy, ish, ise, ize.

A great many adverbs are formed from adjectives by the addition of ly, or by changing e to y; as, wise, wisely; noble, nobly.

DICTIONARY

ENGLISH LANGUAGE.

A (pronounced ā as a letter, but ạ as a word). The first letter of the alphabet, and a vowel:—any; one; some; each; every. A is an article set before nouns of the singular number; as, a man, a tree. It is also prefixed to nouns in the plural number when preceded by the adjectives few and great many; as, a few men, a great many men. Before words beginning with a vowel, or a vowel sound, it takes the letter n after it, for the sake of euphony; as, an ox, an hour. (An is, however, an older form than a.) A is placed before a participle or a participial noun, and is considered as a kind of preposition; as, to go a hunting.
